Naples, September 30, N. S. Their Majesties set out Yesterday in order to pass some Days at Portici; and though the young Prince is perfectly recovered of the Small-pox, he is not to follow their Majesties thither, not being yet permitted to go Abroad. Within these few Days a Brigantine from Malta arrived in this Port; the Master says, he was attacked by several Algerine Xebecks, and though they fought him pretty briskly for some Time, he had the good Fortune to escape with only one Man wounded, who died the Day after he came into Port. All the Troops of this Kingdom are ordered to be compleated at soon as possible, the late Order the King had given for the Reform of the Troops being since countermanded; the Fortifications of Pescara are also ordered to be repaired, and several Pieces of Cannon are to be sent thither, his Majesty being determined to put that Place in a good State of Defence. His Majesty, who often diverts himself with hunting of Pheasants in the Island of Procide, has determined to build a Fort there, in order to secure himself from any Attempt which the Corsairs of Barbary may make on his Person, by attempting a Descent on the said Island. They write from Gaeta, that one of our Ships had brought in there a Corsair of Tunis, with twelve Pieces of Cannon and thirty five Men on board.

All the Troops which were encamped in Bohemia, Moravia, and Austria, are gone into Winter Quarters.
